Pre and para medical NEET PG seats to become more clinically oriented

stha Hemant | Posted on Wednesday, August 3, 2022 14:01

Vacant PG seats in certain streams has been a common phenomenon over the past few years

After five rounds of admission counselling, as many as 1,456 NEET PG seats have been lying vacant for the 2021 academic session. This was revealed by Bharati Pravin Pawar, Minister of State for Health in a written response to a query in Lok Sabha on whether the seats had remained vacant after exhausting all permissible rounds of counselling.

Lack of opportunities in terms of jobs and financial stability in certain pre and para medical specialisations causes disinterest among students, leading to the vacant seats. The Ministry of Health is taking proactive steps to bring these seats under the ambit of 'clinical' so that post completion of the degree, students become job ready.

oot cause

linical streams remain the favourite among NEET PG aspirants while certain pre and para-medical streams like pharmacology, Anatomy, Physiology, Biochemistry, and Microbiology are not preferred, says Dr Abhinav Arun onkar, professor and head of surgery, King George's Medical University (KGMU), Lucknow. "These streams offer the opportunity only to become a faculty member or get into research. Unfortunately, both of these have lost their charm today," he says.

exhaustion of available faculty posts across government and private medical colleges, along with limited financial growth in these profiles has affected students' outlook towards them, he adds.

r Sharath Rao, dean, Kasturba Medical College, Manipal Academy of Higher Education (MAHE), Manipal, says, "Around five years ago, we had close to 130 PG seats, of which around 20 seats in certain specialisations remained vacant. Today, the overall number of seats has increased to 223, but the same number of seats in the same streams are still vacant. Thus, there is need to alter the demand and supply ratio to bring about a change."

ay forward

r B Srinivas, ADG (medical education), Ministry of Health, says that in addition to pre and para medical PG seats in Pathology, Anatomy, Forensic Medicine, Preventive and Social Medicine, among others, certain courses that offer students a diploma also do not get many takers. "To make the less favourite PG seats more attractive, a clinical component needs to be attached to them so that they are no longer classified as pre or para medical seats but come under the ambit of clinical seats," says Dr Srinivas. The government and National Medical Commission (NMC) are taking proactive steps in this direction and hopefully a change will be seen in the next couple of years, he adds.

educators offer few other solutions to the issue as well. Dr Rao says, "The NMC has rules regarding the minimum faculty requirement at any medical institution. The desirable faculty number is 20% more than this number while the aspirational faculty number is 30% more than the minimum requirement. In pre and para medical fields, a possible change can be to bring the minimum faculty number and desirable number at par so that the overall faculty positions in these streams can be increased by around 20-25%." This will automatically affect students' interest in them.

another step can be to popularise the MD PhD programme in these specialisations, adds Dr Rao, wherein after completing the PG, students have a 2-year job confirmation as a PhD scholar. "This will add to the attractiveness of these streams, while students will be better qualified to become teachers and researchers once the course is complete as they will be PhDs in their chosen streams," he says.

PG subjects go abegging

No demand in job market;
500/801 seats vacant

A few subjects in medical courses at the post-graduate (PG) level are losing sheen in the state as there are no takers, amid a dearth of specialists in the field of medicine.

The demand for pre- and para-clinical subjects at the PG level is going down drastically, with 500 plus seats left vacant during the 2020-21 academic year.

The number of seats available in pre- and para-clinical PG courses this year was 801.

Details available from the Rajiv Gandhi University of Health Sciences (RGUHS) show that subjects like anat-pathology have no demand.

Technical hurdle

Though experts recommend freezing admissions to subjects which have no takers, it is not possible technically.

Speaking to DH, a senior official from the department of medical education said, "It is compulsory to have pre- and para-clinical courses while opening new PG departments at medical colleges, according to the National Medical Council norms. We cannot make any changes at the state level."

Students in MBBS say the demand for any subject/course depends on the job market. "If we take up any of subjects have no job opportunities," said a final year MBBS student.

'Redundant subjects'

"We all have studied anatomy in graduation itself. It is better to scrap such subjects at PG level and convert or trans-

her MD in anaesthesia.

Seconding the opinions expressed by students, Dr S Sacchidanand, Vice Chancellor of RGUHS, said, "Yes, the job market is one of the main reasons for students not taking up pre- and para-clinical subjects at PG
